

An Imposition (The Monroe Chronicles Book 1)

Henry Cross made a mistake; in fact he made two. The first was to spy for the Soviet Union inside a top-secret U.S. Department of Energy nuclear weapons laboratory. The second was to get caught. When the KGB finds out Henry Cross is a defector, it orders a second mole at Monroe Laboratory to kill Cross in a conspicuous manner. Other KGB agents need to be reminded that disloyalty will not be tolerated. Upon discovery of the murder, the DOE, FBI, and Monroe security conclude that another spy is operating at the site. Not wanting to reveal its intelligence to the mole or create a media circus at a top-secret lab, DOE covers up the murder. Into this situation walks Ed Cotter, a newly recruited cold warrior. In a world where hyper-enforced federal regulations and their unintended consequences are the norm, Ed proves himself to be a positive addition to the staff. But one of his colleagues, Curtis Judd, is less than thrilled. Judd provokes Cotter in not so subtle ways, letting him know that he isn't welcome at Monroe. But Ed Cotter isn't leaving. In the meantime, the hunt for the spy continues, and Cotter gets drawn into it. An Imposition is the first in a series of books based on events at the Department of Energy's top-secret Monroe nuclear weapons laboratory during the boom years of the Reagan administration. About the Author Bill Merten is a Ph.D. mechanical engineer with a love for the art and science of engineering. Having worked in a nuclear weapons lab for eleven years during the cold war, he draws on his experience there to create the setting for his first novel. He lives in New York City with his wife, daughter, and fluffy white dog. Still undecided? Remember to LOOK INSIDE!
