Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: ... and hastily prepare for moving a command by rail. There is now such an army of practical railroad operators and workmen in the country, that almost anywhere efficient men can be employed to fill the different positions in operating and constructing railroad. It may be almost safe to assume that they would be found in the ranks of every volunteer company in case of a war. WATER TRANSPORTATION. In the United States Army there are no vessels kept especially fitted up for the transportation of troops and materials of war, still our rivers and seas and even the ocean are constantly used as ways of transportation for the army, and it frequently happens in times of peace that one of the first duties of a lieutenant upon joining his regiment is to supervise the loading and unloading of river boats, and in case of war it might very naturally be one of the first duties falling to the lot of volunteer officers, to move a command upon sea going vessels. In any foreign war, except with Mexico or Canada, ocean transportation would be extensively used. During the war of the Rebellion there were at one time 400 sea and bay going crafts employed at the quartermasters department at Alexandria, by which from 1000 to 3000 tons of coal were used daily. When embarking and disembarking are accomplished with wharf facilities, it is comparatively an easy problem. Animals may be led on by the use of gang-planks and artillery pieces, wagons, etc., run on by hand, and these gang-planks carried by the vessel ready for disembarking. When it is not practicable to use gang-planks, animals are hoisted on board by means of a sling and lifting tackle and are unloaded by the same means. Other supplies and munitions are landed in the same way. If the voyage is short and the water smooth, sta...
