Excerpt: ...old days, so they tell, was tempted astray by the lovely charm of a grim bull; likewise, Danae had not the virtue to deny great Jove, although she was encircled by a brazen wall. & Nay, if you madden us Latins by following Greek example, you have the charter of my sentence to go as you please! XXXIII Tristia iam redeunt To Cynthia: against her supertitions and her riotous living. NOW comes this holy season again which I hate! Cynthia has been ten nights at her religious duties. Oh, confound all these ceremonies which the Inachid has sent to our Ausonian matrons from the warm Nile! The goddess who has so often parted eager lovers, who-5 ever she was, was always a sour creature. Thou, Io, at least, didst taste in the secret loves of Jove what it is to engage upon many goings to and fro, when Juno bade the human girl put on horns and spoil her Ian-10 guage with the harsh noise of a brute. Ah, how many a time didst thou hurt thy mouth with oak leaves, and 1 torpsa imilasa latinas. chew the cud of arbutes in thy stalls after a feed! And because Jove withdrew that homely semblance from thy face, art thou grown to be a haughty goddess on 1 5 that account? Is Egypt with her dusky denizens not enough for thee? Why hast thou taken this long journey to Rome? Or what does it profit thee that girls should sleep in bereavement? Nay, trust me, thou shalt have horns again! Else we will rout thee from our Town, so cruel intruder! No kindness has ever been betwixt Tiber and Nile. But you, you who are appeased enough and to spare by our pains, let us after these idle nights of leisure thrice perform our stage. You do not listen! You leave my words to sport idly, though already the Icarian Ox-drivers
