Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: ...briskly through custom and precedent as she has been doing of late, some American woman may yet be elected president--and in this case those patriots who desire to represent this nation in foreign diplomatic fields had better become original Addams men. Miss Addams is not the best known American woman, but she could probably get twice as many votes for president as any other. She is a quiet, demure lady who runs a citizen repair shop in Chicago. Many years ago she went over back of the Chicago River, where the ten commandments were unknown and the statutes of Illinois were only suspected. She has lived there ever since, setting a sort of pattern of successful and sanitary citizenship. The neighborhood has followed the pattern and now sends out teachers to wrestle with the plutocratic sections of darkest Chicago in an effort to bring them up to its standard. Miss Addams built Hull House, where human beings are renovated at a very small expense. In those days, locomotives, ships and corn planters were designed with great skill, but the citizen was fashioned by father Time without any hindrance from anyone. Since then, however, it has become the custom to supervise the designing of citizens with some care, and as Miss Addams was a pioneer in the business, she spends much of her time lecturing, and Hull House is one of Chicagos most popular hotels. Miss Addams is not as loud as some of our leading prima donnas by several whoops, but some of her quietest remarks have gone around the world several times. She is one of the most successful Americans--but is not rated in Bradstreets. WILLIAM J. BRYAN WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN, owner of an undivided half of the
