

Discourses of Redemption: As Revealed at Sundry Times and in Divers Manners, Designed Both as Biblical Expositions for the People and Hints to Theological Students (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Discourses of Redemption: As Revealed at Sundry Times and in Divers Manners, Designed Both as Biblical Expositions for the People and Hints to Theological Students That the noble conception of British and American Christians, half a century since, of the Bible, the religion of Protestants, in every household has produced its fruits, is evinced in the general Bible Renaissance of our age - as seen in the elaborate Biblical disquisitions of infidelity itself; in the multiplication of learned critical helps for the expositions of scripture; and, more than all, in the almost innumerable issues of expositions and illustrations of scripture to meet the general demand for such knowledge among the people. However we may account for the fact, this Renaissance has not yet manifested itself in an equal degree in the pulpit - that divinely appointed agency for the special and authoritative teaching of the Word of God to the people. With the exception of perhaps a slight increase of the expository lecture, the prevailing method of preaching is still that of theological disquisition, ethical essay, rhetorical, persuasive or emotional appeal - founded upon a shred of the Sacred Text chosen as a motto, or, at best, as suggesting simply the theological topic of the occasion.
